Joe Nahem founded Fox-Nahem with his late business partner, Tom Fox, more than 30 years ago. His work, which includes a curation of rare vintage pieces and works by artisans from all over the world, has been featured in most major design magazines, and many books on interiors. His designs can be found in the former home of Jacqueline Kennedy at 740 Park Avenue and the famed Dakota, as well as in residences by master architects such as Stanford White, Charles Gwathmey, and Richard Meier. Today, Nahem's projects include a Martha's Vineyard farmhouse, a penthouse at NYC's Puck Building, and a residence at The Continuum in Miami Beach.

Trained as an architect, Glenn Gissler's interior design practice is the culmination of a lifelong interest in 20th-century art, literature, fashion, historic preservation, and architectural history. These interests are manifested in work that is stylistically diverse but beautifully crafted and integrated into the architecture of the space. A graduate of Rhode Island School of Design, president of the ASID New York Metro Chapter and a long-time board member of the RISD Museum, he maintains a blog called In Pursuit of Design Alchemy. Currently celebrating the 30th anniversary of Glenn Gissler Design, Gissler is completing a house on the water in Northern Maine as well as his own 1840 Greek Revival farmhouse in Litchfield County, CT.
